Administrative History

The story of Napanee as a town began in 1785, with the erection of a saw mill to serve the Loyalist settlers. The west side of the river included a tavern and a store operated by Allan Macpherson in the mid-19th century. By the 1830's, Napanee was a hamlet consisting of about two dozen buildings including St. Mary Magdalene's Church on Camden Road.

By the 1850's, Napanee had grown from a hamlet to a village, but was still administered by Richmond Township. In 1852, Napanee claimed the right to become a police village and eventually separated from Richmond Township in 1855. By Royal Proclamation dated September 29th, 1854, Napanee was declared an incorporated village. The Town Hall was built in Napanee in 1856 in a Classical Revival style to symbolize the growth of the town. Napanee became the County Town of Lennox and Addington after the separation from Frontenac County in 1863 and in December 1864 by an Act of Parliament, Napanee became an incorporated town.

History of Napanee by Jennifer Bunting – *for private research only (A2015.203.27)

In contrast to other communities whose roots are unclear, Napanee's beginnings are well documented. It was the water power from the Napanee Falls which prompted the creation of the town. Napanee was founded in 1785 with the erection of a saw mill to serve the United Empire Loyalists who had left the Thirteen Colonies following the War of Independence.

The builder of the first mills at the Napanee Falls was Robert Clark, a millwright from Dutchess County, New York. Clark had impressed the authorities with his supervision of the construction of a new mill in Kingston between 1783 and 1784. The saw mill was completed in 1785 and Robert Clark left Napanee. By the 1790's the mills were acquired by Sir Richard Cartwright (1759 – 1815) a prominent United Empire Loyalist. Cartwright was interested both in the direct profitability of the mill and in speculation on land in close proximity to the water power. Cartwright quickly bought adjoining property around the mill and hired a miller to operate the mill for him.

In the 19th Century, old residents of Napanee remembered that the first Napanee Grist Mill was unlike other local Grist Mills in that the "Bolting" of the flour was not done by the miller. Each customer had to turn a crank, thereby sifting their own flour into bags. The mills were commercial centres and were often accompanied by outbuildings servicing a variety of functions to capitalize on visits from farmers.

Richard Cartwright had already proven the success of diverse, interconnected businesses in Kingston, where he owned a general store, blacksmith's shop and cooper's shop. Cartwright was less interested in providing a service and more interested in developing a successful enterprise. By 1792, Cartwright began building a new stone mill on the West side of the Napanee River, roughly behind the present location of the Gibbard Furniture Factory.

The 1860's were a high point for Napanee's prosperity and result in a surge of popular optimism in the Town. Prior to 1863, the County of Lennox and Addington, which had a low population, was combined with Frontenac for administration purposes. IN 1859, the Statues of Upper Canada were changed to permit a Junior County which had attained a population of 15,000 or more to separate from a Senior County. Lennox and Addington applied to separate from Frontenac in 1861 and after a period of negotiation was granted separated in 1863 and Napanee was chosen as the County Town.

Town of Napanee Fonds

Napanee was a small but bustling commercial centre in 1860 (it is estimated from the 1861 Census that there were 1773 people living in Napanee in 1861). Buildings along the river included a tannery, a furniture factory, a brewery, a small iron foundry and several merchants. Napanee was now the main market town for a large area, offering water and rail transportation for the export of farm produce, leather, potash and flour. It also provided the farming community with a health array of goods and services from shoes, printing, wagons and photography.

Arrangement and Description

The choice to amalgamate the multiple accessions into one collection was based upon the original source, creator and size the collection. Records are arranged and described based upon their original accession number.

Records are arranged and described in their original order. Choice to not enter large series into Past Perfect (i.e. 2018.118.1231.1 through 2018.118.1231.6404) was based on staff resources. A complete finding aid will be available online for researchers to access.

Records are not individually numbered – please be careful when accessing records – do not give files to researchers.
